

rationale. With that, knowing that Senator Bernard-Stevens has a little problem with time allocation, I'm going to yield the balance of my time to Senator Brashear if he needs it.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Senator Brashear, about a minute and forty-five seconds.

SENATOR BRASHEAR: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, members of the body, thank you, Senator Lindsay. I would like to speak further. I hasten to add that I am not fearful and I'm not intimidated. And I'm not advocating that we reconsider this vote because of items otherwise on the agenda. I say, again, I rise because of my interest in the process and the procedure. Prioritization is a part of the process and procedure. We all understand it. You prioritize early, you may be first. You prioritize before it's out of committee, you may not make it. You prioritize late, you may not make it.

SENATOR COORDSEN: One minute.

SENATOR BRASHEAR: It's an art, I assume, as well as a science. This isn't about, this isn't about Senator Stuhr having done something wrong. Senator Stuhr has begun an initiative here, she's going to be an effective member of this body for longer than this session. This bill can come back and this bill can be done correctly. And I care more about doing it right than I do about how we look or what somebody thinks. I'll raise with you additional issues that I think are worthy of your consideration. The amendment, as proposed, as you read it you will see that it still does not broaden the situation to govern those who are not incarcerated, on probation, or on parole. It does, however, at three, at subsection (3) of the amendment,...

SENATOR COORDSEN: Time. Thank you, Senator Brashear. Senator Pedersen.

SENATOR PEDERSEN: Mr. President, I yield my time to Senator Brashear.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Senator Brashear.

SENATOR BRASHEAR: Mr. Chairman, members of the body, thank you, Senator Pedersen. At subsection (3) of the amendment, the question arises in my mind, when it says, "In order for any
